Graduates have less money, at least for a while. Now I wonder if they need to borrow even more. We're told that only half our school graduates last year had the financial cushion that's necessary to fund a better life. In eight years from now, about $2 billion of debts will be coming due for the Bank of Canada. If the debt isn't paid and a recession comes, then it won't be the first time. The loonie jumped from 68 cents to 79 cents this summer, yet after seven years of loonie decline, the consensus is that Canada has the second-lowest rate of consumer debt in the G7, and fifth lowest when adjusted for inflation. Story continues below advertisement So, the time for financial pain may have passed, or it may be rising to a crescendo. About 23,000 of the 235,000 graduates last year – 9.5 per cent of the school-leavers – will be the first in their families to be saddled with a debt bigger than their family home, if that happens. Two-thirds of graduating students in the first year had no debt whatsoever. But these trends are not new. All my life, I've heard that five years of tuition, followed by two years of student debt – that is, a total of seven years of debt – and you'll have a much better life than if you had no debt at all. Back then, the Trudeau government said that wouldn't apply to people who had to borrow under the Canada Student Loans Program (CSLP). I guess the parents weren't borrowing under the CSLP, and I think I remember hearing this, not clear in my memory. But, of course, those parents were the first ones through the door, at the long lines, while the graduates were much more of a trickle. There was no need to give students back the money after seven years. Story continues below advertisement I remember not putting much thought into it – the idea of a mortgage on your education made sense to me. f678ea9f9e
