Analysis of resistance protein expression in rice (Oryza sativa L.) during resistance responses to tissue culture seedling pathogens and during grain infection by Fusarium moniliforme. Rice resistance to Fusarium moniliforme involves the presence of three types of resistance (R) genes that have been mapped to chromosome 2 and that are encoded by the Rfx1, Rfx2, and rfx3 loci. To determine the relationship between the expression of these R genes and the resistance of plants to Fusarium pathogens, we analyzed the expression of each of the three R genes in plants of a diverse set of rice cultivars that exhibit differential susceptibility to four of five Fusarium species, including F. moniliforme. The Rfx3 gene was expressed in all resistant lines examined, and the Rfx2 gene was specifically expressed in resistant lines. The Rfx1 gene was not expressed in a susceptible rice cultivar that was resistant to a F. oxysporum f. sp. moniliforme strain that does not utilize the Rfx1 gene, suggesting that pathogen effectors can inhibit the expression of this gene. Expression analysis of the three R genes in plants that exhibit differential susceptibility to a ToxA1-producing F. moniliforme strain carrying the txdA1 resistance gene indicated that the resistant line specific expression of the Rfx3 gene is independent of the txdA1 resistance gene. These data indicate that the Rfx3 and Rfx2 genes are constitutively expressed, but Rfx1 expression is inhibited by fungal effectors that are likely deployed by F. moniliforme to inhibit the function of this gene. Thieves steal 86,000 bicycles worth $16 million in central China The country's police are calling on the public for help in recovering lost bicycles that had their owners locked them in the racks to dry. Authorities said that an estimated 86,000 bicycles of different makes and types are now missing from a bike rack in a central Chinese city. Security officials said that the thieves had managed to cut a lock on one of the racks and removed an estimated 86,000 bicycles that were lined up by a utility for dry. Bubbling with sweat: Thieves were able to unload the bicycles stacked in a utility rack, where they were left to dry The loss and its magnitude in the region of 580,000 bicycles is second only to a gold-sm

Differential Dynamics of the Albumin-Mediated Osteoarthritis Chondroprotective Activity of Methyl- β -Cyclodextrin. Albumin is a well-known chondroprotective agent but its mechanism is not fully understood. Current hypothesis that albumin has chondroprotective activity is based on a single postulate that albumin may decrease water loss, decrease cartilage compressive hydrostatic pressure and inhibit metalloproteinases. In this work we compared the ability of a non-peptidic, low molecular weight β -cyclodextrin derivative, methyl- β -cyclodextrin (M β CD), to induce same chondroprotective effects as albumin. Our results indicated that M β CD-induced chondroprotective effects in porcine cartilage differ from the effects of albumin. Specifically, M β CD exhibited a stronger capacity to diminish proteoglycan loss, diminish the expression of pro-inflammatory cytokines and increase chondrocyte viability, whereas albumin rather reduced mitochondrial activity, and induced hypoglycemia. On the other hand, M β CD and albumin both decreased the expression of metalloproteinases MMP-1 and -3. Importantly, we found that the mechanism of action of M β CD and albumin was associated with the presence of macromolecular low-density lipoprotein receptors (LDLRs) on chondrocytes. That is, the mRNA for LDLR were enhanced in the presence of M β CD, and LDLR protein was found in chondrocyte membranes upon treatment with M β CD. These data suggested that the ability of M β CD to induce chondroprotection is at least partly due to the fact that M β CD acts as an activator of LDLRs at the cellular level.
